Workshop on National Consultations on the Participation of Young Burundians in the Activities of the East African Community

On Wednesday, April 8, 2026, Mr. Séverin MBARUBUKEYE, Permanent Secretary in charge of East African Community Affairs at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration, and Development Cooperation, opened the workshop dedicated to national consultations on the participation of young Burundians in the activities of the East African Community (EAC). This workshop brought together a diverse group of participants, including young representatives from universities operating in Burundi, young leaders, and partners committed to youth development.

In his speech, Séverin MBARUBUKEYE emphasized the paramount importance of these consultations for youth, Burundi, and the region, as it is widely recognized that the Treaty establishing the East African Community gives considerable importance to youth. In this regard, he recalled Article 120, which highlights the need for partner countries to adopt a common approach to vulnerable groups, including young people. According to him, this provision reflects a strong conviction: youth are at the heart of the regional integration process.

According to the Permanent Secretary, the EAC Secretariat has implemented several initiatives, notably through the Nyerere Centre for Peace and Research, which, since 2011, has been training young people on essential topics such as peace, governance, and human rights. However, despite the existence of these important opportunities, he regretted that the level of participation among young Burundians remains low. This situation is all the more concerning given that numerous opportunities are offered within the framework of regional integration, but remain insufficiently utilized by Burundian youth. He specifically mentioned: scholarships offered by various partners and donors, prizes awarded at the Youth Leaders Summits, participation in academic debates, including the annual election of a youth ambassador and their deputy, as well as numerous exchange and training programs.

These opportunities, which arise every year, he emphasized, often remain unknown or under tapped, primarily due to a lack of information, awareness, and sometimes structural constraints. The underlying problem of low youth participation in Burundi should not be seen as inevitable, but rather as a call for collective action, added Séverin MBARUBUKEYE.

The Permanent Secretary also indicated that the objective of the national consultations is to pave the way for the creation of an inclusive framework for dialogue, enabling better information dissemination and awareness-raising, in-depth analysis of the causes of this low level of participation, and, above all, the formulation of concrete and operational recommendations. He specified that Burundi's ambition is clear: to have an informed, competent, engaged Burundian youth who are fully active participants in regional integration. He reiterated that Burundian youth are not meant to passively accept regional integration, but rather to actively participate in it through its four pillars and in the implementation of all signed protocols.

Finally, the Permanent Secretary invited the young participants to demonstrate a critical, constructive, and engaged approach in order to identify, without complacency, the obstacles hindering their full participation, whether related to information, organization, capacity, or the institutional environment. He emphasized that these consultations provide young people with an opportune moment for advocacy and a framework for formulating relevant recommendations for all stakeholders involved in youth development, with the aim of establishing effective and sustainable mechanisms to strengthen youth involvement in national and regional life.

At the end of his address, Mr. Séverin MBARUBUKEYE concluded that the Government of Burundi, through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and Development Cooperation, reaffirms its commitment to supporting young people so that they can fully benefit from the opportunities offered by the EAC.
